Employees can face network, hardware, software, and access-related difficulties during their regular work. A clear and consistent process is needed to raise these concerns and provide the necessary information to the support team.

Customer Problem Statement

The absence of a standardized issue-reporting process can cause delays, unclear ownership, incomplete information, and repeated follow-ups. The proposed system aims to simplify issue submission, classification, and tracking through ServiceNow.

Problem Statement – 1: Network / VPN

I am an employee facing a network or VPN problem.
I'm trying to report the issue and receive support.
But I may not know the correct support classification.
Because the reporting process may not clearly guide me.
Which makes me feel frustrated when my work is interrupted.

Problem Statement – 2: Hardware

I am an employee whose laptop is not working properly.
I'm trying to submit the problem with the required details.
But I may need repeated communication with support.
Because issue information may not be captured consistently.
Which makes me feel uncertain about the resolution process.

Problem Statement – 3: Software

I am an employee experiencing a software-related problem.
I'm trying to obtain technical assistance.
But I may be unsure which issue type to select.
Because similar software problems can require different support handling.
Which makes the reporting process confusing.

Problem Statement – 4: Access

I am an employee unable to access a required system.
I'm trying to raise an access-related issue and follow its progress.
But I may not know the correct reporting route.

Because access requests can involve different services.
Which makes me concerned about completing my work.

Final Defined Problem

Employees need a centralized ServiceNow-based mechanism to submit workplace issues with structured information, appropriate classification, and clear request tracking.
